What is it?

Matrix is a skills-based soccer academy for young players up to 16 years, which has been endorsed and filmed by UEFA and highly rated by many international coaches and players. It uses a mix of Portuguese, Italian, Spanish, Dutch and Brazilian football styles, typifying 'total football'.

Who's behind it?

It was founded in 2006 by Blackburn Rovers and UEFA qualified coach, Charlie Jackson, who is also Director of Football at Moorland School, and business entrepreneur, Tahir Khan, who is actively engaged in children's welfare work.

What's so different?

The Matrix system is based around thousands of carefully-devised technical skills drills, created using real game scenarios, and young players typically touch the ball sixteen times more than in conventional soccer academies.

Is it successful?

Already over two dozen Matrix-coached players have joined Premiership and Championship clubs or are playing overseas, while all those who have taken the course have improved their soccer skills considerably and gained more enjoyment from the game.

How much is it?

The cost for a six-week coaching course is £30 inc VAT, payable at the first session, which is excellent value for money and works out at just £5 per one hour session. Courses are usually restricted to around 16 youngsters, so there is plenty of one-on-one focus.
